About Conference

Since independence, India's agricultural sector has made spectacular progress. A nation's amazing transition from food insecurity to food surplus is a success story. Still, there are many constraints being faced by modern agriculture such as resources depletion, climate change, and changing consumers' demand.

The scientific and technological advancements in the fields of biotechnology, digital agriculture, precision farming, and sustainable practices present huge prospects intense research and development as per the climate and soil, we must prepare and execute robust strategies and plans.

To exploit full potential of the technological advancements as a global leader in competitive, climate-resilient, and sustainable agriculture, the agricultural industry must overcome these challenges and take advantage of the opportunities.
